You may want to have a look at this software too: Last edited by metamac on Mon Jun 07, 2010 1:10 pm, edited 1 time in total. Yes, I do know about those two but I'm not experienced with Linux. Do you know where the Ubuntu Software Center looks for software? In my case, it's /opt/Downloads/spotlite-desktop-search-latest_en_1.2.2.26_all.deb In Windows, I right-click on the file and choose open with. Then I have the option to run Spotlite Desktop Search as administrator or not. Is there a similar option in Linux? I tried changing the file permissions to executable, but it didn't work In Ubuntu Software Center, the software is listed under "Search and install software"

Spotlite Desktop Search provides easy access to your documents, which is integrated in any application. You can type any words or text in the various documents and it will search that document and other files on your computer for the words typed. The Spotlite Desktop Search software is very easy to use, it integrates in any application and works in all the different versions of Windows. Features: + Any kind of document, from Word to PDF, HTML, Rich Text Format (RTF) or even PostScript documents. + The search results are extremely fast and precise. + The search is very flexible. The user can choose the search criteria, such as keyword, file size, document type and formatting, language, version, file name, author, date, etc. + You can also use autocompletion to complete your search criteria. + There is also a feature that lets you add notes or snippets to the found documents. Differences to Windows Desktop Search (WDS) and Google Desktop: WDS and Google Desktop have more features, as they use a crawler. The crawler will extract more information and features from your document, and this will make the search results more accurate. That is why these two software are much slower and more resource intensive. Installing: Download the latest version of the software from the links in the right column. The Spotlite Desktop Search executable file is a ZIP archive, that contains three.msi files: - The Spotlite Desktop Search.msi file. - The Spotlite Desktop Search MD5 file. - The Spotlite Desktop Search Service Service that can be started when the software is installed. After you have downloaded the software, unzip the Spotlite Desktop Search ZIP archive in the directory where you want to install it. Run the executable file: "Spotlite Desktop Search.msi". Note: The Spotlite Desktop Search.msi file includes the Microsoft Indexing Service service. To install that service, right click the Spotlite Desktop Search.msi file in your installation directory and click Install. The service will be installed automatically. If you want to have the Microsoft Indexing Service running by default, go to Start > Control Panel > Administrative Tools > Services > Microsoft Indexing Service (it is marked as "Automatic" by default). Right click Microsoft Indexing Service and click "Start" to start it. If you don't want to install the Microsoft Indexing Service, follow this procedure: In the "Spotlite Desktop Search.msi" file, locate and double click the following icon: - "Spotlite Desktop Search MD5 file". In the following window, click on the "ok" button: - The "Spotlite Desktop Search MD5 file" will be extracted to your installation directory. Now that the Spotlite
