===== SnowFlakes
is a simple and easy-to-use utility that displays falling snowflakes on your desktop. It was designed to display continuous snowflakes falling on your desktop. The user interface consists of a simple icon that displays the falling snowflakes. You can modify how many snowflakes are displayed and how long they are displayed for. You can start or pause the display of snowflakes with a single click of the mouse. SnowFlakes Features:

===== Simple user interface You launch SnowFlakes, and the icon appears in the system tray. There is no menu, no window, no pane and no sections whatsoever. You cannot access or modify anything at all, and you can only pause or quit the application from the system tray icon. Multiple transparency levels You can specify the transparency of the snowflakes, and you can choose a snowflake display duration. Little to no documentation There is no documentation, apart from a change log that mentions a command line utility that might come in handy for advanced users, who might want to manually change the application's settings. SnowFlakes

Price: Free (non-commercial use) If you want to keep your PC from running slowly and you're a fan of the Anime series "Sailor Moon", you might want to look into this Super Saver program. It's a free alternative to the famous "Auto Shutdown Saver." The feature set is limited, but it's still very useful. It's also very simple to use. Feature Set: Basic: * Screen saver for 20 seconds of the anime "Sailor Moon". * "Close" button. * Automatically close the program after the screen saver finishes. Enhanced: * Option to play "Sailor Moon" sound effects. * Option to play "Sailor Moon" background music. * Option to pause the screen saver or music. * Keep track of what time the screen saver finishes. * Stop the screen saver if the computer is asleep or in hibernate mode. Advanced: * Password protection. * User friendly interface. * Auto shutdown of the computer after the screen saver ends.

(rdcorrea@gmail.com) Price: Free Lifetimer allows you to create a screen saver or desktop wallpaper that displays an image with a counter (or timer) in the bottom-left corner, as shown in the screen shot below. You can display a snapshot of your desktop, or choose a photograph of your choice from the /usr/local/share/images directory. The program includes many images in both JPG and BMP format. You can also add your own custom images, if you want. The image can be up to 64 Kb, and the image dimensions can be up to 800 x 800 pixels. Once you set the time to display your timer, you can schedule the screen saver to start at a particular time, or you can turn off the screen saver altogether. You can also

Falling snowflakes is an application that shows beautiful snowflakes falling from the upper left corner of the desktop in a random manner. It can be useful for those of you who like to customize the desktop, or for people who are bored of just watching snowflakes fall. This program doesn't have an integrated menu, so you need to use the native desktop configuration utility to adjust its settings. Screenshots: The normal layout. A screenshot with the application settings. The bottom left corner after a restart. Screenshots of the native utility that can be used to configure the program.

System Requirements:

As much as possible, we would like to avoid selling any of these systems with incompatible component versions. For example, we are not able to sell a system with Core i7 7800K but no discrete Nvidia GPU (the current minimum supported GPU is Geforce GTX 970). If you find yourself in this situation, we ask that you contact our team and we can determine if we can assist you. I know that it's not ideal to ask for this, but we'd still like to ask that you contact us before you order a system. We don
