Because the first index seems easy, but the problem is that we need to

What's new:

Volume Two ~ Day 7 The outdoor shower was under the spout of a running creek, probably the remnant of a spring fed creek that tributaries flowed down the barren land surrounding the base and further down the eastern fjord. The lightweight green poplin shorts hung loosely on his flaccid frame. The cotton t-shirt hung a couple of inches longer and was stained with perspiration, making the long sleeves droop off his arms. He barely noticed the reek of his own body as he parked himself in the booth set just outside of the wooden doors of a café erected out of plywood along the paved, lake shore. Enormous pans of biscuits, eggs, sausage, and the like were laid out on opposite sides of the small room. Staring at the menu, he wondered how much he had to eat. Another forty-five minutes of walking from the base to here had almost evaporated any memories of carb-loading he had by his regular meals. A toothless old woman with bright eyes greeted him and handed him a cardboard menu. "Hope you're hungry." Justin nodded and without conscious thought gestured for her to go. With a growing certainty in his voice he realized that this place wasn't a trap. "Get out of my sight, now! I've had a hell of a lot of shit tonight and I don't want you here or anywhere near me or I will shoot you!" Her eyes wandered from him to her menu and back to him. "You're hurting," she said simply. On impulse, he replied, "Now you tell me." "I'll get you some breakfast. Eggs and sausage and hangover biscuit if you'd like." Gleefully, the old woman filled a plate, pancake with sausage and eggs on the side. The aroma of fried food, charcoal smoke, and coffee caught in his nose and his stomach growled. When the item came, it was greasy, but he was hungry and before he could stop himself, he was chewing. "What the hell?!" he exclaimed, staring at the plate. The old woman gestured broadly with her free hand towards the offending food. "It's bad, huh?"

Narcosis is a dark psychological horror game set in a underwater penal colony, which is a fragment of an underwater prison built years ago, which is now an isolated island. The prisoners have been made to work and live in an inhospitable environment in which their sentences have been revoked. Players take the role of one of the prisoners, who has somehow been given the chance to escape and make their way in the harsh environment. The game relies on minimal controls in favor of storytelling and immersion, as the player is handed a realistic form of communication, emphasizing the role-playing and storytelling aspects of the game over the fun of running and shooting. If you find this claustrophobic atmosphere too much, you can opt out of the game's narrative. About The Author I am a 22 year old college student with a love for gaming and a camera. My involvement in gaming started when I was little and I joined my first gaming group in 7th grade. I now am a part of two distinct gaming groups, they are both with Xbox: one a dedicated gaming group and the other a community. My hobbies are watching anime, manga, and movies, I go to a local cinema twice a month and the rest of the time I am playing video games. I love game design, writing, creating, crafting, and just playing games. Google removes Flash-based video - tux1968 ===== ph0rque Why would this "Google removing flash content"? ~~~ mkuhn Google is betting that HTML5 + video is the future. So they try to start moving there. ~~~ ph0rque I don't think the strategy is that simple. ~~~ mkuhn But that is how the industry has developed in the last decades: Flash was the videocapturer the majority of the time. Then HTML5 came and HTML5 is the capturer right now. $2 * y + q . L e t o (f) = 8 7 * f * * 2 - 2 9$
