First one - canvas - minefride ===== minefride Quick overview: I built [is a little tool that randomly generates the paths to certain landmarks for you. You can make one for yourself and family, friends, or simply to enjoy on your own. You can see in which order you decide to travel through life. The first one is a little demo. How it works? 1\ Choose the name of a random landmark (remember that I hide all the information about you) 2\ Choose the distance from the selected landmark 3\ Press the "generate" button 4\ See what location you end up at ----- ddtaylor I think this is really neat, you should eventually make it work on your own life. Also you might want to try generating a life path given a date range.

What's New In MediaCodeSpeedEdit?

The editor for firmware media codes. With this software you can edit your firmware and flash it faster. And, of course, you can export the codes to file for closest examination. Key Features: — Completely clean and safe media code editor: no extra files are created, no entries added to the Windows Registry and no setup is required. — Full view of the codes: you can edit any code, set their name and write speed and they will update automatically. — Change the write speed: increase or decrease the write speed of your firmware. — Export codes to file: save to file your codes and use them separately. — Support for many formats of firmware files: both for Windows, Mac and Linux. — Simple but extensive usage: no configuration is required to edit your media codes. — Convenient Widget: you can open it from the desktop. What's new in 1.2.2.8: — Bugfix: codes of archived firmware images cannot be modified if there was a code modification with the previous version. The following essay by James Downes of The New Zealand Herald has been posted to The Commentator [on Monday 4 December, 2005. It was received on Sunday 3 December, 2005. St. Mary's College had a saying that to be a student was to be a pilgrim and the biggest attraction was the Christmas Fayre. Students made contributions of food, gifts and donated things which were often used to enrich the food of the poor. The Director of Student Affairs made it clear that the Christmas Fayre was a student project and so the students had to organise the event with the usual fundraising requirements. It was a bi-centenary present, a birthday present for not only the college but for the centenary of the Blessed Sacrament Church that it sits in the heart of Masterton. The fundraising went well because the students were confident that they had the skills to lead the fundraising effort. The one from whom I spoke was an asset as she had extensive organisational experience. Aware that poor people were a source of income, the students went on a fundraising mission for them. "We started off by having conversations with the poor," she said, "and talking to their neighbours." Together they discussed how they could help the poor people of the area. The idea was
