ABC Television Network executives have been advised to move quickly to change the name of a series now on the air, fearing the word "spandex" will be misinterpreted by consumers in the marketplace. "Do we really want to be calling a show 'The Legend of Sleepy Hollow'?" a top network executive said Thursday. Spandex has become well-known as a sheath material for body wear. Industry sources say that the show has been loosely based on a story by Washington Irving, the author of "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow." Sources said that the network cannot use the word "curse" because it is too negative. The popular sitcom "Sex and the City" was rejected by the TV network because of the word "sex," but it was adapted into an internet-only magazine show. Another network said that it considered changing the name of a series based on another long-running show, "The Beverly Hillbillies." "We liked it," the network source said. "But we thought 'The Beverly Hillbillies' was going to be misinterpreted." A group of politicians wanted the series renamed after Lew Alcindor, known as Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who played the celebrated center for the University of California-Los Angeles team. The journalist Bill Press said, "Here's a guy who was a black guy who won an Olympic gold medal, he was the best basketball player in the world. But they didn't want him to be known as Kareem.
