Sign up for our COVID-19 newsletter to stay up-to-date on the latest coronavirus news throughout New York If there's one thing New York's medical marijuana landscape has made abundantly clear, it's that the state's medical marijuana program is intended for chronic pain relief — and the state's main governing body, the Department of Health, has said that opioids are not included in the list of debilitating conditions that can be treated by medical marijuana. That leaves medical marijuana users with two choices: Get their doctor to write a prescription for them or take matters into their own hands and navigate the state's medical marijuana program, which is loaded with rules that can be confusing to navigate and local laws that can make the process more complicated. Corydon is a Medical Marijuana User Group for New York City, and in the group's latest Facebook post, members shared their own experiences, including how to deal with patients who smoke marijuana, how to use a vaporizer and other general
